ACTIVE PURENESS

WHAT IS OILY SKIN?

The skin is normally covered by a hydrolipidic film, which has a protective action, and is composed of a hydrophilic or aqueous component, the NMF (Natural Moisturizing Factor) and an oily component consisting of sebum and epidermal lipids. The function of the hydrolipidic film is to preserve the skin's hydration, limiting excessive evaporation of water and providing defense from the outside, thanks to its acidic pH and to the antibacterial substances produced by the fatty acids of the sebum.

Essential for the beauty and balance of the skin, sebum can turn from being an ally to the skin, to becoming a problem for the skin, when its composition is altered or the activity of the sebaceous glands is not balanced. The EXCESS SECRETION OF SEBUM defines the skin condition known as "oily skin".

OILY SKIN has a shiny appearance, is thick and has dilated pores. This type of skin tends to form blackheads and blemishes. It is oily and slippery to the touch, especially in the T zone, which includes the forehead, nose and chin. The presence of sebum can also be felt in front of and behind the ears, at the temples, on the décolleté and between the scapula (shoulder blades). It is more common in men than in women, and occurs more often in adolescents rather than adults.

TYPES OF OILY SKIN

Oily skin can be classified in three ways, according to the different composition of sebum:

1. OILY SKIN - The sebum is particularly abundant and liquid. The skin looks shiny and has large, dilated pores.

2. ASPHYCTIC SKIN - The sebum is waxy, dense and trapped within the follicle. The excessive production of sebum obstructs the follicular duct and therefore the sebum, cellular waste products, and bacteria become trapped within. This occlusion gives rise to comedones, which can be closed and deep down (whiteheads) or more superficial and open (blackheads). Asphyctic skin sometimes appears as not having excessive sebum production, in which case it appears dry and rough to the touch, due to the presence of comedones. This condition is often characterized by hyperkeratosis, which is the thickening of the outer layer of the skin, the stratum corneum.

3. IMPURE SKIN - The bacteria trapped in the follicles cause inflammatory reactions and produce serious and painful lesions, finally provoking pustules and acne. Impure skin is also subject to redness and is easily influenced by changes in temperature. This type of skin condition affects a high percentage of adolescents, but can also affect young adults within the 25-30 age group.

HOW TO RECOGNIZE IT

	TO THE TOUCH	VISUAL
OILY SKIN	oily, thick, compact and smooth	shiny, thick, dilated pores
ASPHYCTIC SKIN	oily or dry and rough	yellow-grey, shiny, thick, dilated pores with black and white comedones
IMPURE SKIN	oily, irregular	reddish, shiny, dilated pores, pustules and lesions

THE CAUSES OF OILY SKIN

ENDOGENOUS (INTERNAL) CAUSES

The excessive production of the sebaceous glands can be dependent on a genetic predisposition, constitutional factors or hormonal changes, in particular the male hormones. It is for this reason that adolescents, especially boys, are more subject to juvenile acne. The same applies to other pathologies linked to the secretion of hormones, such as the polycystic ovary syndrome in women, who have the tendency to develop oily, acneic skin.

EXOGENEOUS (EXTERNAL) CAUSES

The use of some pharmaceutical drugs can stimulate excessive sebum secretion. Oily skin can also be the consequence of using cosmetic products that are not suited to the specific skin condition, being too aggressive or even too rich. In an indirect way, an unbalanced diet, with high intake of junk food, can contribute to the onset of oily skin.

THE 4 STEPS THAT LEAD TO ACNE

Oily skin is usually predisposed to developing acne. Four typical and sequential phases which lead to the onset of acne can be identified:

1. SEBACEOUS SECRETION - The increase of the male hormone secretion is the primary cause of excessive sebum production.
2. INFLAMMATION - When free fatty acids, present in sebum, come into contact with the air, they oxidize, forming free radicals, which activate an inflammatory state and consequently irritation.
3. HYPERKERATOSIS - Inflammation then stimulates a defense mechanism, which induces the cells to multiply more intensively. This creates a thickening of the stratum corneum (at the level superior to the pilosebaceous follicle), which results in the pores becoming blocked.
4. BACTERIAL PROLIFERATION - The obstruction of the follicle creates an optimal condition for the proliferation of the Propionibacterium Acne bacteria, normally found in the follicular duct, but which proliferates intensively when there is the condition of excess sebum and absence of oxygen.

ACTIVE PURENESS PURIFYING RENEWING MATTIFYING

For the relaunch of ACTIVE PURENESS, [comfort zone] has strengthened the formulas and has enriched the offer to purify, renew and mattify oily skins in an even more effective way. Thanks to the combination of alpha poly hydroxy acids, a blend of white and green clays and the natural extract of Garcinia Mangostana, the system acts on all four phases which lead to acne, preventing its formation and maintaining the skin purified and matte over time. The new ACTIVE PURENESS adheres to the formulation philosophy, Science-Based Conscious Formulas™, free from silicones, parabens, mineral oils, and achieving up to 96% natural-origin ingredients. It does not contain SLES nor other surfactants that are aggressive for the skin.

ACTIVE INGREDIENTS

BLEND OF WHITE AND GREEN CLAYS contrast the overproduction of sebum and help mattify the skin.

GARCINIA MANGOSTANA is an evergreen tropical plant, whose fruit is known as the "king of fruits", for its delicious taste and pleasant aroma. The peel is rich in polyphenolic components and xanthenes, of which alpha mangostin, tannins, and flavonoids promote a valuable antioxidant action. The extract also carries out an effective antibacterial and anti-inflammatory action, which renders it ideal for the treatment of oily skin.

ALPHA-POLY-HYDROXY ACIDS (gluconolactone, mandelic acid, glycolic acid) promote an exfoliating action, which contrasts hyperkeratosis, smooths the skin and reduces the appearance of pores.

ACTIVE PURENESS

HOME CARE

The ACTIVE PURENESS SYSTEM is composed of a gel and tonic for profound, renewing cleansing; a clay mask which is astringent and mattifying; a hydrating fluid, ideal also as a make-up base; and a corrector for a localized action on blemishes.

PROFESSIONAL

The professional treatments, with purifying, oxygenating and mattifying actions, are available in two versions:

- COMPLETE (60 minutes) characterized by the innovative ACTIVE PURENESS PEEL-OFF MASK, with spirulina algae for mattifying.
- EXPRESS (30 minutes) with the use of the ACTIVE PURENESS MASK with white and green clays for a quick and simple treatment.

Both treatments include the use of the ACTIVE PURENESS PREP MASK, a keratolytic exfoliating mask, particularly effective for the extraction of comedones.

LIFESTYLE TIPS

OILY SKIN AND DIET

Some foods increase the chance of having oily skin, in particular those foods with a high glycemic index and refined carbohydrates: sweets, sugary drinks, bread, pasta etc. These foods rapidly and consistently increase the concentration of glucose in the blood with a consequent peak in the insulin hormone, which in turn leads to an increase in inflammation; that silent, but chronic pathology. Alcohol and caffeine can alter the circulation and temperature and also increase this state of inflammation, and therefore it is advisable to limit consumption of these elements. For a healthy, balanced skin it is recommended to consume foods rich in fiber such as vegetables and whole grains, to avoid sugar, and reduce meat and dairy products, and to choose fish, almonds and wheat germ oil, which are rich in omega 3 and provide a good quality of sebum. What about chocolate? Chocolate does not need to be avoided completely; it is actually recommended for a protective antioxidant action thanks to the polyphenols from cocoa. But it depends on how much and what kind of chocolate you eat: it is recommended to eat 6-7 grams of dark chocolate (70%) per day. It is however recommended to completely avoid milk chocolate and white chocolate, which have too many fats and sugars and not enough of the good elements that make chocolate a precious nutritional, as well as delicious, food. Finally, zinc and selenium supplements are recommended to help prevent excessive oiliness.

OILY SKIN AND THE SUN

During the summer, oily and impure skins suffer even more. Initially it appears that the sun actually "dries" the impurities, improving the T zone and reducing blemishes. However, the sun also accentuates an inflammatory process, an underlying cause of acne, causing a thickening of the stratum corneum, which then leads to the formation of comedones. The apparent improvement is also related to the skin achieving a tan, which gives the skin a uniform color and hides the imperfections. So it is good to get some sun exposure, but always using sun protection and not overdoing it.

OILY SKIN AND STRESS

It has been shown that stressful conditions can alter hormonal production, bringing about oiliness in the skin and even acne. It is therefore recommended to take some anti-stress actions; in particular a moderate amount of physical exercise can help balance stress and reduce levels of cortisol. Other relaxation techniques, such as meditation and yoga, are highly effective in alleviating stress.

GLOSSARY

Also known as the African Spider Flower, it is rich in rutin and hydroxycinnamic acid; it reduces the sebum oxidation and consequently inflammation.

Include gluconolactone, mandelic acid and glycolic acid. They all have exfoliating actions.

An amino acid, obtained by the fermentation of vegetal-origin raw materials, delicately regulates the pH of the formulation.

A clay mineral with absorbing and plastifying properties, giving structure to the clay masks.

An Ecocert™ approved preservative, active on bacteria.

Acidity regulator.

Delicate surfactant.

Ethyl alcohol which has antiseptic properties and acts quickly on imperfections such as spots and pimples.

Delicate surfactant.

Promotes the removal of keratinized cells.

An extract rich in polyphenolic components with powerful antioxidant and antibacterial actions.

Poly hydroxy acid with delicate exfoliating and hydrating properties.

A humectant of natural origin.

An alpha hydroxy acid with exfoliating properties, it helps to remove impurities from the pores.

Thickening of the stratum corneum induced by inflammation.

A white and green clay mineral with sebum-absorbing properties.

A liposome is a tiny bubble (vesicle) made out of the same material as a cell membrane. In this case, it is derived from lecithin, and has the extraordinary capacity to increase absorption of the active principles, improving their bioavailability. Lecithin is dermo-compatible since it is a natural component of cell membranes.

Delicate surfactant.

A new-generation alpha hydroxy acid; thanks to its size, it penetrates less than glycolic acid and is therefore more delicate. Its antiseptic properties make it ideal for the treatment of imperfections.

The skin's natural hydrating factor, composed of substances which are not lipidic or hygroscopic, but which originate from cellular turnover, such as amino acids, lactic acid, urea, sugars and salts.

Increase of sebaceous secretion primarily induced by male hormones.

ASPHYCTIC: has a yellowish appearance, is shiny, with visible dilated pores.

IMPURE: has a rosy appearance with impurities, spots and pimples.

OILY: appears shiny, thick, with visible dilated pores.
